Message from the President

This report is being written while on site at the Willunga Gemboree. The weather has been fine and very kind to us.

NSW has done very well in the Gemboree Competition with Clubs all over NSW and ACT winning awards.

Some entries are the results of the educational courses that were run by the council over the year.

Congratulations Western Suburbs – Well Done.

In the December Newsletter you will have noticed some small articles/fillers on "What is a Mineral ?"and "The earth". I plan to continue with these articles / fillers in the hope that it will introduce you to some basic Mineralogy and Gemmology that may assist you with mineral and gem material purchases. You will find some more throughout this newsletter.

Now what is Gemmology?

Well Gemmology is neatly defined by the Gemological Institute of America as: "The science of those minerals, and other rare minerals, beautiful and durable enough for use as personal adornment and the embellishment of our personal possessions"

Briefly, Gemmology is the scientific study of gem material and is becoming an everincreasing necessity for the jewellery trade but also for us lapidarist. A basic understanding of mineralogy and gemmology while not purely essential is a great help when you find or buy minerals and gem materials.

On a side note, you will come across two spellings for Gemmology, Gemmology and Gemology, both are correct as the Americans spell it with one m.

The Loupe

One basic tool but extremely important that you should never be without when looking at mineral and gem material is a Hand Lens / Jewellers Loupe / Loupe (loupe). Although there are a number of magnifications and sizes out there it is recommended that a 10x (10 times magnification) is best especially for gemmology - as the greater the magnification the shorter the working distance.

For example, a 10x loupe has a working distance of around 2.5cm (distance from the object), whereas a 20x loupe has a working distance of around 1.25cm. As you can see the higher the magnification the closer the item has to be to the loupe to be in focus.

A diameter of 21 mm is a good size, but you can go larger or smaller if you wish. Some come with their own light source.

Before you rush out and by a loupe though, you need to make sure you get one that has been corrected for distortion due to dispersion (colour fringing of the image edge - achromatic) and refraction (spherical distortion - aplanic) of light as it passes through the glass lenses, a loupe that is corrected for both these aberration is called apochromatic loupe.

The tipple lens is the best and a must for gemmology, but you can get by for general viewing with a doublet lens which are cheaper, provided it has been corrected for the aberrations discussed.

You can check your loupe by looking at a piece of black and white graph paper it should look some like this:

There are two basic ways to hold your loupe:

- 1. hold the outer casing between the index finger and your thumb, bring the loupe up to your eye or glasses (it's up to you which hand or eye you use), allowing the back of your thumb to rest against the side of your nose keep the loupe steady. Your remaining fingers should be parallel and below the index finger.
- 2. I prefer this method, passing your index finger finger though the cover of the loupe bring the loupe up to your eye or glasses and rest your thumb against your cheek. Your remaining fingers should be parallel and below the index finger. I think this method give you more room and allows better control to help stabilise the tweezers or stone holder with the other fingers while using the other hand that is holding the tweezers / stone holder to move the stone into and out of focus. Thus, allowing you to look from the near surface and move though the stone to the far surface (assuming you have a transparent or semitransparent specimen that is).

It is important to remember to always keep the loupe up to your eye or glasses and bring the specimen up to the loupe or bend down towards the specimen if it is too big to handle.
